Infinitive verbs

The infinitive describes the general meaning of the verb. In English, we often write 'to + verb':

It's important to listen.

In Spanish, many infinitives end in –AR:

Escuchar es importante.

(Listening is important.)

Note the difference in English.

Present tense –AR verbs

hablar - to speak | speaking

hablo → I speak

hablas → you speak

habla → he speaks

habla → she speaks

habla → it speaks

Present tense – ER verbs

leer - to read | reading

leo → I read

lees → you read

lee → he reads

lee → she reads

lee → it reads

Definite articles – ‘the’

To say the in Spanish use el before a masculine noun and la before a feminine noun.

el campo

la plaza

The personal ‘a’

In Spanish, after verbs such as 'ver' [to see, seeing] and 'visitar' [to visit, visiting], we use 'a' if what we see or visit is a person or a pet. This does not happen in English!

Visito a un amigo.

I visit a friend.

Visito el museo.

I visit the museum.

Plaza Mayor is the main square in many towns and cities in Spain. In Latin America, the main square is Plaza de Armas.

Barcelona

Indefinite articles - 'some'

Remember: to mean a (or an) in Spanish use un before a masculine noun and una before a feminine noun.

un museo

una iglesia

To mean some for a masculine noun, use unos, and use unas before a feminine noun:

unos museos – some museums

unas iglesias – some churches

Plural nouns

Most nouns in Spanish add -s for plural:

unos bocadillos – some sandwiches

unas revistas – some magazines

unos parques – some parks

unas tardes – some afternoons

How many?

To mean 'how many' before a masculine noun, use cuántos:

¿Cuántos ojos hay?
How many eyes are there?

To mean 'how many' before a feminine noun, use cuántas:

¿Cuántas bocas hay?
How many mouths are there?
